Reiki Teaching: How To Run A Reiki Share (Part 2)

In my last blog, "How to Run a Reiki Share \(Part 1\)", I spoke about what Reiki shares are and why you might want to organise or attend one, and I ran through lots of practical points like where to hold them, where to find treatment tables, what to bring with you and how it actually works in practice in terms of working out timings and keeping track of time during the treatment sessions.

Here, I want to talk about: where to stand around the treatment table with different numbers of participants, what hand positions to use, how to finish the treatments, using intuitively-guided hand positions at shares, giving and receiving attunements and empowerments, and what other things people get up to at Reiki shares!

Where should people stand, around the treatment table?

This is not set in stone, but here are some useful combinations for different numbers of participants:

Three people

Four people

Five people
